

Moving to Canada?

Christopher Bollinger

A number of my Democrat friends (and myself) have joked about moving to Canada. I even hear that the Canadian Immigration web site recieved more hits the day after the election than in the whole previous year. I suspect, like my friends and I, most people are just kidding around. Yes, we're pretty dissappointed with the election results. But I for one do not give up on Constitutional Democracy. I certainly don't give up on the United States. The great thing about our society and government is that our constitution guarantees the rights of the minority. This is crucial. It's why we've survived so long. Not every country is that way. When Germany elected Hitler Chancellor in 1933, those who were in opposing parties were ultimately disenfranchised and often killed. Other examples include Cuba, Soviet Russia, China under Mao, Iraq, Iran, and a host of other examples. Ultimately, these societies failed. Only by including the "loyal opposition" does our country continue to succeed. That, is truly the revolution of democracy.
